History

The SEO bookmobile once traveled throughout six counties in Southeastern Ohio with approximately 4,500 books. The first SEO mobile technology training center was developed in 1998 with a vision from one of SEO's previous directors, Ward Murrey. His idea was to reach out to public libraries across Ohio with innovative technology via a retrofitted bookmobile.

The second generation of the mobile technology center arrived at SEO in October of 2002. After the installation of computers, a projector, and other peripherals, the lab traveled to Monroe County for a trial run. In January 2003 it went to Canal Fulton Public Library for its first official visit.

The mobile technology training center has proven its value to libraries across Ohio. It averages 2,500 patrons participating in 250 classes at 30 libraries each year.

In 2012, John Stewart developed a plan to transform the Mobile Technology Training Center from traditional computer training, to focus on mobile touch screen devices. The bus was equipped with 24 of the most popular devices in 2014 and will serve the purpose of training staff and patrons for the digital era.
